

Organisational co-design readiness assessment

Choose the option that best describes you and your organisation.

	Strongly Disagree	Disagree	Unsure	Agree	Strongly Agree
Co-design is important to our organisation and is supported from the top down
Experience-based co-design or other co-design frameworks are widely used across the organisation
We will ensure budgets, time and resources are allocated for everyone in the co-design team
We have clear policies that help co-design teams to collaborate throughout core business
We will support and enable minimal viable pilots and prototypes to be trialled with the end-user
We engage with consumers with lived experience for all our co-design projects
We are able to allocate physical project space so it can live – on site
We are able to allocate physical project space so it can live – off site
We understand the difference between quality improvement (QI) and research ethics and how QI applies to co-design
We are willing to involve staff other than clinicians depending on the project-focus area
We will ensure social support is available for the co-design team if needed
Our organisation will assign leaders who will provide guidance and support for co-design teams and co-facilitators
Our leaders have prior experience with the co-design tools and framework, and role model core concepts in everyday life
We understand that the teams may work on questions that may be reframed since the start of the project. We trust the process					